THE rotarian OF SUGAR HOUSE

By Harriett Schloer, Exec. Sec. of the Convention Goers Fellowship

Since 1998, my husband and I have only missed three Rotary conventions. We have both come to look upon the convention as our annual vacation with the opportunity to visit many foreign countries and revisit some of our favorite places in the United States.

We always plan our trip to stay an additional week after the convention closes so we can get in all of the sight-seeing we can. In terms of the convention itself, it is our annual opportunity to again spend quality time with very close friends and make new ones.

The annual reunion dinners are a special treat and we never miss the spectacular Major Donor Dinners put on by The Rotary Foundation. We have taken our two grandsons (ages 13 and 15) to Lisbon and Sydney and both continue to talk about the experience as ones they will never forget.

We've heard great speakers from Queen Noor to Bill Gates to Dolly Parton to Penny LeGate and experienced some fantastic entertainment including Debbie Reynolds in San Antonio and the Four Tenors in Lisbon (fabulous!)

For us the convention has it all ... friendship, fellowship, inspiration, and education. Anyone who has never attended a Rotary Convention has not experienced the true "internationality" of Rotary and until they do, they will be missing a very important part of being a Rotarian.

THE 101 YEAR OLD CROSSWORD PUZZLE SUPERSTAR

Bernice Gordon

You may not recognize her name but if you do crossword puzzles in The New York Times, The Los Angeles Times or in many other publications around the world, you likely have done some of Bernice's crossword puzzles.

Bernice, who recently passed away at the age of 101 in her Philadelphia home, created puzzles until two weeks before her passing.

An early riser, Bernice typically created her puzzles between 3 am and 6 am, using the tools of her trade: a brilliant mind, dictionaries, almanacs and other reference materials.

And when she was nearly 90, Bernice switched from manual production, to creating her puzzles on a computer, seeing no reason why age should stop her from using a computer.

Yet her creation of crossword puzzles started so simply.

A busy housewife and mother, Bernice loved doing crossword puzzles, and she decided she too could create those puzzles.

In 1952, 38 year old Bernice mustered her courage and with high hopes, submitted a crossword puzzle to the prestigious New York Times. The Times rejected it.

It was disappointing but Bernice refused to give-up. She kept submitting puzzles, learning from every rejection.

Then one day The New York Times published one of her puzzles and Bernice was on her way.

Ever creative, at the age of 99, Bernice teamed largely by email with David Steinberg, a 16 year old Californian more than 80 years her junior, to produce a highly contemporary puzzle.

"Phenomenal" is what Will Shortz, The New York Times crossword editor called it, and published it.

Steinberg, still just 18 years of age, is now the crossword puzzle editor for The Orange County Register.

When asked what he learned from Bernice he replied, "More than anything I was inspired to keep constructing. No matter how old you get or what happens in life, keep doing what you love."

"Even when she was almost terminally ill," her son Jim Lanard said, "She was still up at her computer doing puzzles. She'd get excited about a new theme - colors, movies, you name it."

Crossword puzzles "make my life," Bernice told the Associated Press after celebrating her 100th birthday last year. "I couldn't live without them." And Bernice never did live without them, as each day she did what she loved.
