Welcome to Sugar House Rotary,

Highland High School Principal Jeremy Chatterton

Once a math teacher and girls' basketball coach at Highland, Chatterton is left his job as principal of Dilworth Elementary to take over at Highland.

"Highland is an amazing school with great traditions. I am so pleased I have been able to be a part of it in the past. My expectations are to see those traditions continue," Chatterton said. He has worked with Jensen quite a bit in the past and is excited to continue the great things he's started.

"The faculty at Highland is fantastic, the students there are great," Chatterton said.

Chatterton is a native Utahn who went to public school in Murray and graduated from Judge Memorial High School. While in college and still deciding what to do, he was the Boy's JV basketball coach at Judge. He enjoyed coaching so much, it inspired him to go into education. He began his teaching career at Judge where he taught math and coached the Girls basketball team. Six years later, he transferred to the Salt Lake City School District to teach at Northwest Middle School. He then came to Highland to teach math and coach the girls varsity basketball team. He has worked all over the district being an assistant principal at both Highland and West.

When taking over at Highland, he wants to push every student to his or her full potential and he hopes everyone can find their own little niche. Whether that is a sport, club, art, drama or other organization, he wants every student to be actively engaged in something.

"I think high school can be one of the best times of your life and I want everyone to have that same feeling; to really be involved and engaged and enjoy their time," Chatterton said. He knows it's not always easy for all kids, but he hopes every student can do something outside of just coming and going to school every day and really attach themselves to Highland. He will be attending the activities such as sports and other performances Highland has to offer because he wants to celebrate the students and what they are doing. He knows the school song and is ready to sing it at a moment's notice.

He wants to bring that sense of pride and legacy to the "Ram Fam" so the school can continue to nurture it. Chatterton wants to make sure students feel accepted, are enthusiastic to learn, and feel a connection to what is happening at the school.

Chatterton says that students can expect to see him greeting students before first period starts, smiling and making sure everyone feels welcome as they are walking through the building. He also desires the teachers to feel supported and have what they need. His focus is to make sure everyone who enters the doors feels as though they are a part of Highland High School.

"I love Highland, I want to make sure everyone else has that same feeling," Chatterton said.

Chair Sugar House Community Council

Landon Clark

By Aspen Perry, The City Journals

Clark has spent the majority of his life in Salt Lake. He grew up in North Salt Lake and graduated from the University of Utah. Clark and his wife spent only a few years in Rochester, Minn. to attend school. Returning to Utah they settled in Sugar House 19 years ago and consider themselves Sugar House "lifers".

"I like understanding and being part of the community planning process," said Clark.

Given the growth of Sugar House residents and businesses, there is never a dull moment.

"The influx of people into Sugar House brings some headaches, like traffic and parking, but the restaurant options, new businesses, and bustling downtown are really cool. I like walking up 2100 South and seeing all the restaurants busy on a weekday night," Clark said.

"Busy times in Sugar House," Clark said.

Regardless of the issues being brought to the table, Sugar House Community Council members are committed to ensuring residents are involved in Sugar House happenings. In addition, they are the voice of residents when discussing issues or planning with any government or private organization that will directly affect the Sugar House community.

"I believe Landon will empower members of the community to bring their ideas to the table. He is considerate of the voices of our neighbors and works diligently to include as many view points as possible... [he] doesn't jump to conclusions without hearing the whole story," according to Bryce Williams.

In addition to Williams' belief that Clark will empower the community, he appreciated how approachable Clark is and, on a fun note, their shared appreciation for University of Utah athletics.

Amy Barry also looks forward to the contribution Clark brings as SHCC chair.

"Landon is enthusiastic about our community [and] always has inquisitive questions. Landon brings a fresh perspective to his new position as chair... [and] is continually ready to learn more and be a more effective leader for Sugar House," Barry said.

Clark encourages residents to visit the SHCC website at sugarhousecouncil.org to find out about community happenings, as well as to provide feedback to the council.

"For the majority of problems and opportunities, I believe a committed community council can really make a difference," said Clark.
